Speeding up recovery. Muscle cells are most receptive to carbohydrate during the first two hours following a training session. To accelerate recovery, consume 300-400 calories of carbohydrate shortly after the training session and another 300-400 Calories of carbohydrate within two hours. This intake of carbohydrates as well as replenishing the fuel stores, also have a positive effect on protein restoration in muscles.

The Body Economic is the first, agenda-shaping, look at the human costs of financial crisis - the culmination of ten years' work by two pioneering researchers - Sanjay Basu and David Stuckler. The global financial crisis has had a seismic impact upon the wealth of nations. But we have little sense of how it affects one of the most fundamental issues of all: our physical and mental health.

The body's metabolism slows down, in order to prevent it from going into the starvation phase. When you restrict, the brain receives signals that it is hungry and requires food for fuel, which can make it difficult to eat mindfully. This increase in appetite can lead to over-eating or bingeing later in the day.

Your body doesn't grow when you train—it grows when you recover. Shoot for 7.5-9 hours of sound sleep every night. Stretching may not necessarily make you more flexible, but it helps relax your body and kick-start the recovery process. After your workout, pick 3-5 main areas and hold for five full breath cycles.

The body of a man has been recovered from the river in York. Police were called at around 9.13pm on Friday (9 October) when concerns were raised after a 77-year-old man from Nun Monkton did not return home after going out for a walk earlier in the evening. Officers carried out a search of the area. This included air support from the National Police Air Service and river searches by North Yorkshire Fire and Rescue Service and York Rescue Boat.
